ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I want to express my sincere gratitude to the five individuals who in this book will be referred to as ‘Ali Bakhtiyāri, Amir, Jamie, Mohamad Mahdi and Mosta‘ār. It is only thanks to their incomparable generosity and warmth that I have been able to complete this study. I am highly indebted to them.

This book was originally my doctoral thesis in History of Religions at Uppsala University. My supervisor there, David Westerlund, was an invaluable asset for me throughout the time that I worked on this book as he has remained one after that as well. It was he who introduced me to the idea of postgraduate studies in the first place and through the years he has followed my work with relentless encouragement and interest. I am very grateful for his support, his accessibility and his excellent scrutiny of my drafts. I am also much indebted to my assistant supervisor, Gudmar Aneer, whose profound knowledge on Iranian religion and culture has been of great value to me.

My colleagues at the department for the History of Religions at Uppsala University have provided advice and encouragement for which I am very thankful. I would especially like to thank: Jenny Berglund, the late Jan Bergman, Rannveig Haga, Christer Hedin, Eva Hellman, Peter Jackson, Pia Karlsson, Maria Liljas, Ulrika Mårtensson, Leuben Njinya-Mujinya, Susanne Olsson and Lena Roos. I also want to express my appreciation to the members of the higher seminar for Iranian studies under the chairmanship of Bo Utas and the higher seminar for Sociology of Religion under the chairmanship of Alf Linderman and Thorleif Petterson. Thanks also to Mohammad Fazlhashemi, Catharina Raudvere and Eva Evers-Rosander, who all have taken time to read and comment on my drafts, and to Yann Richard for his valuable comments in the last phase of my work. Special gratitude I like to convey to Håkan Rydving for his thorough reading and invaluable substantial advice concerning my work. His suggestions have had a great impact on the final form of this book. Thanks also to all those who have assisted me with the Persian language, not least my first Persian teacher Carina Jahani and Forogh Hashabeiky in Uppsala. I am also grateful to Zakir Hussayn for being my living encyclopaedia of Shi'ite matters.

Finally, I want to express my deepest appreciation to my parents, Inger and Bengt Thurfjell, for their ceaseless confidence and encouragement of the paths that I have chosen; and to my wife, Anna-Karin Brus, for her admirable endurance and serenity. I dedicate this book, with love, to her.

Uppsala, May 11th 2006
