

PREFACE

An undertaking of the scope of this book of course owes much to many people. I have drawn on the work of many scholars, philosophers, and logicians, past and present. I should especially like to thank Ignac Angelelli, without whom I would not have learned of reduplication and who guided my initial research on this topic. I also am grateful to the other members of my dissertation committee, Doug Browning, Al Martinic, Alex Mourelatos, and the late Najm Bezirgan, for their help and patience then. Many other people also aided my research in a supererogatory way (The following list is roughly in the order of the historical period when their aid was most pertinent): Jonathan Barnes, Lynne Spellman, F. V. Zimmermann, David Blumenthal, Sten Ebbenson, L. M. de Rijk, Eleonore Stump, Norman Kretzmann, David Mosher, Paul Spade, Jenny Ashworth, M. Mugnai, Hans Burkhardt, Mark Kulstad, Barry Stroud, Bangs Tapsco, Rudy Makkreel, Kit Fine. I thank Hilla Hueber for her careful editorial work, and Gail Hirsch for her work scanning and preparing final copy. Let me also thank Phila for working on, and Paul for not eating, the manuscript.

The preparation of this manuscript was subsidized by grants from the Graduate School of the University of Texas at Austin, and the Dean's Office of Emory University. I also have made extensive use of the library collections of Harvard, Yale, and the University of Texas at Austin, particularly the History of Logic collection at the Humanities Research Center.
