

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Of the studies gathered together below, Chapters 1 and 10 were written specifically for this book, and Chapter 9 is the original, somewhat fuller, version of a long essay which appeared in the form of two articles published in the Journal of the History of Ideas, LIX (No. 3, 1998), 437–61, and LIX (No. 4, 1998), 669–90. I should like to thank the Journal of the History of Ideas, Inc. for permission to reprint both this material and, as Chapter 8, a further article “Jacobean Political Theology: The Absolute and Ordinary Powers of the King,” Journal of the History of Ideas, XXIX (No. 3, 1968), 323–46. I must also thank the following publishers, journals and learned societies for permitting me to reprint articles originally published under their auspices: The Past and Present Society, 175 Banbury Road, Oxford, England, holder of the World Copyright of “Celestial Hierarchies Revisited: Walter Ullmann’s Vision of Medieval Politics,” Past and Present: A Journal of Historical Studies, 60 (August, 1973), 3–48 (Chapter 2), and “‘Anxieties of Influence’: Skinner, Figgis, Conciliarism and Early Modern Constitutionalism,” ibid., 151 (May, 1996), 60–110 (Chapter 5), both reprinted with the permission of the Society; Brill Academic Publishers for “Verius est licet difficilior: Tierney’s Foundations of the Conciliar Theory after Forty Years,” Nicholas of Cusa on Christ and the Church, ed. G. Christianson and T.M. Izbicki (Leiden, 1996), 15–34 (Chapter 3); The Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies, University of California, Los Angeles, for “Legitimation by Consent: The Medieval Roots,” Viator, XIV (1983), 303–35 (Chapter 4); The Catholic University of America Press for “Complexities of Context: Gerson, Bellarmine, Richer and the Venetian Interdict of 1606–1607,” Catholic Historical Review, LXXXII (1996), 369–96 (Chapter 6); Imprint Academic for “Locke, Natural Law and God—Again,” History of Political Thought, XVII (1997), 624–51 (Chapter 7).

For his kind assessment of the manuscript and for including it in the series Studies in the History of Christian Thought I should like to thank Professor Heiko A. Oberman. And for research support most generously extended at one point or another during the long years I was working on these studies, I am indebted to the American Council of Learned Societies, The National Endowment for the Humanities, The Institute for Advanced Studies, Princeton, The Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, Washington, D.C., The National Humanities Center, Research Triangle, North Carolina, and the President and Trustees of Williams College. The College was also kind enough to provide a subvention in support of publication. I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge, too, that I was fortunate enough to be able to share earlier drafts of several of these pieces with my colleagues in the History Department and at the Oakley Center for the Humanities and Social Sciences, Williams College. For their help, criticism, advice and collegueship I am most deeply grateful.

F.O.

Williamstown, Massachusetts

January, 1999