

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We owe gratitude to many more people than we could name for their influences on this project. Special thanks go to the following individuals for their comments and suggestions regarding portions of earlier drafts of the manuscript: Gregg Horowitz, Donald Sherburne, and David Wood from Vanderbilt University; John Sallis from Penn State; and Richard Zaner from Vanderbilt University Medical School. We also appreciate George David Miller's informal contributions from Lewis University. We are especially grateful to Tracy Polanowski for her editing and preparation of the text for printing. Additional thanks are extended to the editors for copyright permission regarding two articles by Jon Mills that were adapted for this book: much of Chapter Three was originally published under the title "The False Dasein: From Heidegger to Sartre and Psychoanalysis" in the Journal of Phenomenological Psychology, 1997, 28:1, pp. 42-65, and portions of Chapter One and Chapter Four appeared in The Owl of Minerva, 1996, 28:1, pp. 59-75, under the title "Hegel on the Unconscious Abyss: Implications for Psychoanalysis." Finally, to our families we extend our sincere affection and appreciation for their concern, encouragement, and patience, which made this work possible.