Reformation era Christian Hebraism can be a rather forbidding field of research since it touches on humanism, the history of printing, historical theology, biblical studies, and Jewish history. Without the judicious advice of individuals and the financial assistance of institutions I would not have been able to complete this book. The original research for this book was supported in part by a German Academic Exchange Service grant, a Swiss Government Grant, and a Charlotte W. Newcombe Dissertation Fellowship. A timely Research Assistance Grant from the American Academy of Religion enabled me to clear up some thorny questions I had about early modern anti-Jewish polemical writing generally. Professional support from the Norman and Bernice Harris Center for Judaic Studies at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln made it possible for me to present my research to a wider scholarly audience. I would particularly like to thank the Brewer Prize Committee of the American Society of Church History, who awarded this book the Brewer Prize in 1994.

While working on Johannes Buxtorf I have benefited constantly from the advice and encouragement of scholars from a number of fields. Dr. Joseph Freedman helped me to begin archival research in the arcane world of seventeenth century university history. Professor Hans R. Guggisberg, Dr. Martin Steinmann, director of the Basel UB manuscript department, and Dr. Andreas Staehelin, former director of the Basel Staatsarchiv, all gave generously of their time and advice. Professor Peter T. Van Rooden and his wife graciously invited me to stay with them in Leiden for a week as I examined manuscript materials in Leiden, Amsterdam and Leeuwarden, at the same time giving me the opportunity to discuss Dutch Christian Hebraism with him. M. Bernard Turretini of Geneva had photocopies made of several Buxtorf letters that are preserved in the Turretini Family Archive. Dr. F. Seck of Tübingen UB kindly gave permission for me to quote from his unpublished four volume collection of Wilhelm Schickhard's correspondence. Professor Thomas Willi of Greifswald University and Dr. Abraham David of the Jewish National and University Library in Jerusalem have aided me by examining manuscripts I was unable to see personally and by arranging for me to obtain copies of them. Terrance Dinovo, curator of the Lutheran Brotherhood Foundation Reformation Research Library, acquired a number of rare books on microfilm and made them available to me through Interlibrary Loan. Professor Robert Kingdon read an earlier draft of this work with scrupulous care and his comments on it were most helpful. By suggesting that I study Johannes Buxtorf, Professor Norman Roth started me on the path which had ended with this book. I have appreciated his sage advice and his willingness to help with the numerous conceptual and bibliographic problems I have encountered while writing it. I would especially like to thank Professor Heiko A. Oberman for accepting this book in the series Studies in the History of Christian Thought.

Finally, this list of acknowledgments would not be complete without mentioning my wife Amy, a friend and colleague, paleographer and linguist extraordinaire. Without her encouragement and help this book would not have been possible.
