

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Bringing to a conclusion, with the presentation of this dissertation, four years of study at the University of Louvain, I should like to acknowledge my profound indebtedness to the professors of the Institut Supérieur de Philosophie for having, so generously and so professionally, made possible my introduction to the larger horizons of the philosophical quest.

The particular achievement of this study would have been impossible without the professional assistance and steady guidance of Professor Jacques Étienne. His availability, his patience and the lucidity of his insights and critiques have more than once saved this project from stagnation. The gratitude expressed in these phrases is but small recompense for the support and interest which he has shown and for the rewarding experience which has been mine in having had the opportunity to work in close cooperation with a man who combines so well the competence of scholarship with the qualities of gentlemanliness. In like fashion, I should like to acknowledge the advice given to me in the early stages of research by Canons A. Dondeyne and R. Aubert of the University of Louvain and by Professor Henri Gouhier of the Sorbonne. More recently, M. Louis Le Guillou of the Collège Littéraire Universitaire de Brest has most kindly shared with me his own vast erudition in mennaisian studies for which I am most grateful.

The preparation of this paper has been immensely aided by the generosity of the Frères de l'Instruction Chrétienne, spiritual sons of Ven. Jean-Marie de La Mennais, whose unforgettable hospitality during the past summer made possible a major part of the research undertaken at the mennaisian Archives maintained at Highlands, Jersey, C.I. No words of gratitude would be sufficient to acknowledge the devoted and able assistance unstintingly given by Bro. Joseph F. Libert, F.I.C., the archivist. In a similar manner, I am grateful to Bro. André Parenteau, F.I.C., whose readiness to assist in bibliographical questions has proved so helpful.

To my own superiors, former Provincial, Very Rev. Theophane Mayora, O.A.R., and the present Provincial, Very Rev. Joseph M. Santiago, O.A.R., I express my gratitude for having initiated and supported my philosophical studies at Louvain. Nor could I possibly overlook the sympathy and encouragement which I have received from my family during these many years of absence and separation.

Finally, I wish to thank my friends in Belgium who have introduced me to their homes and their culture and my fellow-priests at Louvain who have been such good companions during the past four years. I especially acknowledge the help offered by Fathers Raymond Devettere, James Hession, Joseph Kuntz, and Joseph Zenk in the preparation of the text for presentation.
