

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This work was first written as a Doctorate thesis under the supervision of Professor Georges Abi-Saab and Professor Philippe Cahier, both of the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Geneva, Switzerland. It has since been substantially revised. I am most indebted to Professor Abi-Saab who, as my principal supervisor, closely scrutinized each draft. Professor Abi-Saab's high intellectual standards provide me with much personal inspiration for which I will always be grateful. I am grateful to Professor Cahier who also supervised my work and provided me with valuable suggestions and improvements in his warm and friendly manner. Professor Cahier's lectures at the Hague Academy of International Law which I attended in 1985, sparked my initial interest in undertaking doctorate research at the Graduate Institute in Geneva. I wish to thank Dr. Gudmundur Alfredsson, Human Rights Officer of the United Nations Centre for Human Rights in Geneva, for his suggestions on the final draft. I hold his comments on the draft, and his human rights work at the United Nations, in high esteem. Any shortcomings in the book remain my sole responsibility. I wish to thank the Graduate Institute of International Studies for their grant which facilitated publication of this book.

Acknowledgments

Finally, I wish to thank my wife, Ms. Connie Ahmed, for having spent many hours on each version of each draft and for having made valuable suggestions on the content and expression of the ideas. Her stringent critique has resulted in immeasurable improvements to the present work. It is to her that this work is dedicated.
