

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book draws on a Phd research conducted under the supervision of Prof. William A. Schabas, Director of the Irish Centre for Human Rights in Galway, Ireland.

My preference for this theme, “the prosecution and defense of peacekeepers under international criminal law,” was fueled not only by the lack of a comprehensive work in this area but also by my scholarly and practical background in international law. In addition, my experience as reserve officer in the Royal Netherlands Marines Corps enabled me to monitor the convergence of military operational law with international humanitarian law and international criminal law. This topic seems of ever-increasing importance in view of the changing nature of international peacekeeping and its emerging exposure to high-combat situations which may bring international criminal liability concepts closer by.

In thanking those who have inspired and assisted in the preparation of this study, I must first of all mention Prof. William A. Schabas, who patiently supervised my dissertation. I remain indebted to him as he not only provided me with stimulating knowledge but also guided my academic perception and career in international criminal law.

I was fortunate to have the law faculty of the University of Utrecht as my academic home in the last phase of the preparation of this study. Many colleagues of this University supported me, especially Prof. Dr. C. Brants and Prof. Dr. C. Kelk. I am particularly grateful for the trust all my colleagues at the Criminal Law Faculty of Utrecht University gave me in pursuing and fulfilling my new academic and challenging task as professor of (international) criminal law. The same goes for my legal colleagues at the law firm of Knoops & Partners, Amsterdam, especially Ms. Karlijn van der Voort for her indispensable assistance in the last and crucial phase of this research. As with my previous books, Ms. Frederique Wessel, my ever-loyal secretary, provided indispensable support and encouragement in typing and reviewing the manuscript. In this area, I was fortunate to have Mr. Terence Hegarty again as my highly skilled editor.

Many impressive persons who became my friends have inspired and supported my academic career so far. First of all, my academic mentor and friend, Prof. M. Cherif Bassiouni, whose knowledge and wisdom is always an important source for my work; Prof. Ernst Hirsch Ballin, who stood at the beginning of my law career; Ms. Heike Fenton, President of Transnational Publishers Inc., New York; Major-General Willem A.J. Prins, Commander in Chief of the Royal Netherlands Marine Corps; Major-General Frank van Kappen, former Military Advisor of the Secretary General of the United Nations and Major-General Patrick C. Cammaert, Military Advisor of the U.N. Department of Peacekeeping Operations; furthermore Ms. Sharon Williams, former Judge at the ICTY and Professor in International Criminal Law at Osgoode Law School, Canada; Dr. Ray Murphy; John Dugard, Professor of Public International Law who taught me the first steps in public international law; and, of course, my whole family, especially my mother Josephine, my ever-supportive mother-in-law Janny, my three sons and my late father Martinus and father-in-law David.

In this book I have endeavored to distill also from my academic and practical experience with several international criminal courts before which military officials are (were) prosecuted. I am beholden to all those working at these international courts, some of whom I became friends with, who enabled me to learn from them. Especially my friends at the ICTY and the Special Court for Sierra Leone merit acknowledgment. I am keenly aware that their trust was of crucial academic inspiration.

It goes beyond words to express my gratitude to my lovely wife Carry, who assists me so well as co-counsel in all our endeavors. Without her, this achievement would still be fiction.

The law in this book is stated as of August 1, 2004.
