Acknowledgments

First I should like to express my appreciation to Professor Charles Chappell, who conceived of the erstwhile Bertie Wilson Murphy Symposium in Literature and Language, the program that brought the five writers whose words constitute the body of this book to Hendrix College, and to Mr. Charles Murphy of El Dorado, Arkansas, who endowed the program named in memory of his mother. And without the gracious cooperation of the stars of this book—William Humphrey, Reynolds Price, Harry Crews, Robert Drake, and David Madden—the collection of interviews could never have been made.

The Hendrix Faculty Development Program provided me with a grant, which allowed me to avail myself of the expertise of Mrs. Jean Nunn, who skillfully typed most of this text and provided a wealth of helpful advice as well. I wish also to thank Fred Hobson and James Olney, editors of The Southern Review, in which an interview each with William Humphrey and Reynolds Price appeared; Robert L. Phillips, Jr., editor of The Mississippi Quarterly, which published the other interview with Humphrey; and Joycelyn Trigg, managing editor of The Southern Quarterly, where the supplemental interview on Price's "Waiting at Dachau" was first published. My colleague Kenneth Story provided helpful suggestions on the introductions to the authors. Mostly, however, I want to thank my wife Lynn for her assistance; without her good judgment and valuable suggestions and encouragement, this project would surely have gone awry.
