

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This acknowledgement is an inadequate expression of my thanks to a large number of people without whom the completion of this study would not have been possible. The present book is a revised version of my doctoral thesis submitted to the University of Hull in 1980.

For 14 months (from August 1972 to September 1973 inclusive) my wife and I lived in Borneo. We spent approximately 12 months in Maloh communities in the Upper Kapuas region of West Kalimantan (Western Indonesian Borneo), and two weeks in an Iban long-house in the Lubok Antu area of Sarawak. During that time our Dayak friends provided us with food and shelter, made sure that no harm befell us on our journeys by river and over land through difficult rain-forest country, and took time to reply to our often tiresome questions. The list of people who helped us during that period would fill many pages, but those who stand out in my memory are, at Nanga San (Sarawak), Luyoh and Pengabang, in the Embaloh area ex-temenggung Kasso, temenggung Rajang, Sabina, Imas and Samulang, in the Palin river temenggung Bakupak, Bau, Kasian and Karurung, and in Taman country Kanderan and Tulung Daun.

During our journeys we were given generous hospitality at the house of Abang Sjahdansjah, the bupati of the Kapuas Hulu region. He and his wife showed us great kindness. We were also cordially received at the Catholic missions in Sintang, Bika, Putus Sibau and Benua Martinus.

While in Pontianak and its environs our difficulties in finding accommodation were solved by the kind offices of Ethel and Gerry Reeder of the Mission Aviation Fellowship, Jo Lunn of the Overseas Missionary Fellowship, Len and Barb Rittersbach of the New Tribes Mission and Bruce and Hazel Darby of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union.

Assistance during the preparation for fieldwork was provided by Bapak Hartoyo of Tanjungpura University in Pontianak, Bapak Kolonel Supardiyo and Bapak Kolonel Marjans Saragih. Thanks are also due to the Dutch-Roman Catholic fathers who kept our mail moving and our supply lines open, particularly Pater van Donzel and Bishop van Kessel.

We are indebted to Bapak Suji for taking care of a number of our transport problems between Pontianak and Putus Sibau. During our four-week stay in Sarawak the facilities of the Sarawak Museum were placed at our disposal by Benedict Sandin, the then Curator, and Lucas Chin, Assistant Curator. Among our many friends in Kuching who made us feel at home we would like to express our special thanks to John and Meg Clifford.

The inspiration for undertaking fieldwork in Sarawak and West Kalimantan came from the late Professor Mervyn Jaspán. Many hours of discussion and invaluable critical comment have been supplied by my colleague Mr Lewis Hill. My thanks also go to Dr George Appell of Brandeis University, Professor Derek Freeman of the Australian National University, and Professor Rodney Needham at Oxford for their lively correspondence. My original interest in Borneo was stimulated during my SOAS days by my then supervisor the late Barbara E. Ward.

For the duration of the fieldwork I was generously supported by a Social Science Research Council Award, the Evans Fund and the British Universities Student Travel Association. Bibliographic and archival research in Holland was made possible by the British Council Younger Research Workers' Interchange Scheme and grants from the Centre for South-East Asian Studies, University of Hull.

I wish also to thank the Sarawak Museum and the Centre for South-East Asian Studies for granting me permission to use already published material from my "The Maloh Language: a Vocabulary and Summary of the Literature", Sarawak Museum Journal 24(1976):137-64; "Maloh Country: the Physical Setting and the Local Economy", Sarawak Museum Journal 27(1979):29-42; Ethnic Classification and Ethnic Relations: a Borneo Case Study, University of Hull; Centre for South-East Asian Studies, Occasional Paper No. 2 (1979).

My sincere thanks are also due to Pat Wilkinson for patiently typing the manuscript and to Derek Waite for drawing the maps.

The research and writing up could not have been completed without the continued support of my wife, Judith King, who has acted as research assistant, companion, nurse and critic.
