

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would first like to thank Alan Milchman and Alan Rosenberg, the editors of the Holocaust and Genocide Studies (HGS) special series within the Value Inquiry Books Series (VIBS), for proposing this volume. I also want to thank Richard T. Hull and Robert Ginsberg, editors of VIBS, and Eric van Broekhuizen of Rodopi, for answering my pleas for help, and for helping the project progress along its various stages.

Many other people have helped at times during the production of this book, with encouragement and wise words. Zoë Waxman kindly read and commented on the introduction. I want to thank Scott Ashley, Susan Hawley, Martin Porter, and Simon Sparks for discussion and friendship, and my parents for their love and support. Finally, thanks and much more besides to the Snib.

This book is dedicated to the memory of Anthony Craft, a close friend of several of the contributors. For Elie Wiesel, writing is a matzeva, “an invisible tombstone, erected to the memory of the dead unburied.” Let this book, in its small way, be a visible tombstone erected to the memory of one dead, buried before his time.
