

EDITORIAL FOREWORD

Civil Society in Southeast Europe is the third volume in this special series, Post-Communist European Thought. It presents ideas and arguments from writers, most of whom live in Southeast Europe, a part of the world that, for several years, has dominated the news with its tensions.

Recent constructive developments in the region indicate that civil society may be gaining in firmness and strength.

The chapters here provide mostly an insider's view of how difficult this is to achieve, and yet, as we can observe, possible.
