

EDITORIAL FOREWORD

Samantha Brennan, Tracy Isaacs, and Michael Milde have coordinated the work of a team of philosophers in exploration of the personal, ethical, and political dimensions of values. The major question of values at stake is the connection between individual, society, and state. Involved are issues of action, rights, autonomy, freedom, property, justice, and liberalism. With keen sensitivity to theoretical work in North America and Great Britain, the contributors to this inquiry offer lively arguments and fresh insights that are representative of the best of contemporary Canadian thought.
