VOLUME 23

This series, Linguistic Biblical Studies, is dedicated to the development and promotion of linguistically informed study of the Bible in its original languages. Biblical studies has greatly benefited from modern theoretical and applied linguistics, but stands poised to benefit from further integration of the two fields of study. Most linguistics has studied contemporary languages, and attempts to apply linguistic methods to study of ancient languages requires systematic re-assessment of their approaches. This series is designed to address such challenges, by providing a venue for linguistically based analysis of the languages of the Bible. As a result, monograph-length studies and collections of essays in the major areas of linguistics, such as syntax, semantics, pragmatics, discourse analysis and text linguistics, corpus linguistics, cognitive linguistics, comparative linguistics, and the like, will be encouraged, and any theoretical linguistic approach will be considered, both formal and functional. Primary consideration is given to the Greek of the New and Old Testaments and of other relevant ancient authors, but studies in Hebrew, Coptic, and other related languages will be entertained as appropriate.

Acknowledgments

I want to thank God who gave me the grace and stamina to write this study. My hope is this work will achieve for the people of God a deeper understanding for Christ's future Parousia and kingdom. I thank with deepest gratitude my wife, Donna, who was beginning to think that I would be bound to this writing project for a thousand years. Thank you for your loving patience. I also want to thank Stanley E. Porter, Cynthia Long Westfall, and Martin M. Culy for their constructive criticisms on my Greek linguistic analyses as it helped to produce a more competent work. I thank Christopher D. Land for introducing me early on to important studies on the literature of cohesion; John J. H. Lee for his feedback on my cohesive harmony analysis; Francis X. Gumerlock for his comments on the appendix concerning historical views on the millennium; Michael J. Svigel for providing me with his unpublished notes regarding the issue of the identity of the ones who sat on thrones in Rev 20:4; David J. Fuller and his encouragement to keep pressing on; and Zachary K. Dawson for his tedious proof of the manuscript.

Finally, I dedicate this work to David and Kristen Wisen, who helped me achieve this time-consuming project through their support and prayers. I am grateful and humbled.
