

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book has developed out of my doctoral dissertation which was submitted to the European University Institute in Florence in 1983. I have received help from many sources in writing the dissertation, as well as the present book. It was Professor Charles Wilson of Jesus College, Cambridge who originally drew the rich archives of the Dutch church, Austin Friars, to my attention and thus started me on my venture into Anglo-Dutch history of the early seventeenth century. I have also benefitted from criticism and advice from Professor Patrick Collinson of Cambridge University. The late Professor Jan van Dorsten of the University of Leiden not only suggested that I write this book, but also invited me to Leiden to work within the Sir Thomas Browne Institute, thereby providing me with an opportunity to discuss my ideas with several of his distinguished colleagues. I am indebted to Professor Willem Nijenhuis of the University of Groningen, Professor Jan van den Berg and Dr. Simon Groenveld of the University of Leiden who very kindly read and discussed my manuscript with me and whose suggestions and references have been invaluable.

I have benefitted greatly from the opportunity to discuss my work with friends and colleagues, among them especially Dr. Edward Chaney of Lincoln College, Oxford. I should also acknowledge the help I received from Miss Irene Scouloudi, Secretary of the Huguenot Society of London, who very kindly allowed me to read the manuscript of her newly published book on the returns of aliens from the State papers of the 1620s and 1630s before it went to the press.

None of this research, however, would have been possible without the generous financial support of the Carlsberg Foundation in Copenhagen to which I am deeply grateful. I also wish to thank the President and Fellows of Clare Hall, Cambridge, for having elected me to a visiting fellowship in 1983/84 and for electing me a life member which has made it possible for me to continue my research in congenial surroundings.

As will appear from the footnotes, my research has been conducted in a number of archives and libraries in England and Holland to the staff of which I am indebted. Special thanks, however, should be expressed to the staff of the Guildhall Library, London.

I am grateful to Ms. Helen A. Brown and Dr. K.A. Liebreich for advice and linguistic assistance which saved me from the most damaging errors. For what mistakes remain, I am wholly responsible. Last but not least I thank Dr. Yoko Mitsui for her expert typing.
