

Acknowledgements

Many people have helped and assisted me in various ways during the period of my studies and research. I wish to express my special thanks to Professor Sir Francis Vallat, Q.C., K.C.M.G., my former teacher and supervisor of my Ph.D. thesis at King's College, University of London, for the guidance he gave me during my formative years in international law, and for his continuing interest and assistance. My special gratitude also goes to Professor Georges Abi-Saab of the Graduate Institute of International Studies, Geneva, Switzerland, my former teacher and supervisor of my Memoire de diplome es Sciences Politiques, for the assistance and encouragement he has rendered to me during the past few years, and especially for reading the whole draft of the present book. It is difficult to express in words my indebtedness to him.

My thanks go also to His Excellency Judge Sir Robert Jennings of the International Court of Justice; His Excellency Judge T. O. Elias, President of the International Court of Justice; Professor Ian Brownlie, Chichele Professor of Public International Law at the University of Oxford, and Fellow of All Souls College; Professor Oscar Schachter, Professor of International Law and Diplomacy at the Columbia University School of Law; Professor K. R. Simmonds, Dean of the Faculty of Law, Queen Mary College, University of London; Professor Osita Eze, Professor of Law at the Imo State University School of Law, Aba, Nigeria; Professor Ph. Cahier, and Professor Lucius Caflisch, of the Graduate Institute of International Studies, Geneva, Switzerland; and Professor Ukandi Damachi, Dean of the Faculty of Business Studies, University of Lagos, for their assistance and encouragement over the past few years.

I am also indebted to my former colleagues at the International Labour Office in Geneva, especially Dr Francis Wolf, the Legal Adviser and Assistant Director-General, and Dr Felice Morgenstern, the former Assistant Legal Adviser, who made it possible for me to join the ILO, and to benefit from their wealth of experience on the constitutional law and practice of the Organisation. I also benefitted immensely from my special collaborator on the Working Party on the Structure of the ILO, Dr Francis Maupain and, of course, the articles and personal advice of Professor Nicolas Valticos. However, none of them shares responsibility for the views and pitfalls in the present study.

XVIII

I must not fail to give my special thanks to some of my good friends and colleagues who have assisted me in many ways and contributed in one way or the other towards the successful completion of the present book. In particular, I wish to record my gratitude to Irene Pearson, of the International Labour Office in Geneva, Switzerland; Mr Bassey Akpan of the Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity in Addis-Ababa, Ethiopia; and Mr Sammy Okomilo, General Editor of the Africa Journal, Lagos. I also thank Mr Celestine Godpower for his assistance and co-operation in typing the manuscript of this book. I also wish to thank the University of Jos for a research grant which enabled me to travel to Switzerland to collect materials for the completion of this book.

Finally, I wish to express my gratitude to my wife, Ann, for her patience and encouragement at all times.