

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I wish to express my appreciation to the National Science Foundation (COSIP) and to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization for the research fellowships which helped to make it possible for me to spend six months in London, gathering facts and organizing my thoughts on the effect of nuclear weapons on the actions of nations. I also thank the Faculty Research and Travel Committee of Hollins College for the financial assistance they provided. For some time I had wanted to begin expressing some of my impressions about international relations in the nuclear era, impressions that went somewhat beyond the familiar observation that war is unthinkable. These three organizations made time and financial assistance available so that I could begin to put down some of my thoughts on this subject. Finally, I wish to thank Laura Nash and Yvonne Moran for their help in preparing the final version of the manuscript for this book.
