

PREFACE

Research on this book was done at three Law Schools. It commenced when I was a graduate fellow at the Yale Law School and was completed when I was teaching at the University of Tasmania and at the National University of Singapore. I thank teachers and colleagues at these institutions for sharing their thoughts on this area of the law with me.

Many contributed to the successful completion of this work. The example that Professor T. Nadarajah set me as a scholar and a teacher has remained an inspiration despite the distance that has separated us. Dr. C.F. Amersinghe, who first taught me international law, instilled an early interest in this area of the law to which he has made major contributions. Peter Cohen and his staff always managed to get me the books I wanted even in Tasmania and demonstrated the indispensability of good librarians to researchers. Gayle McElvey at Hobart and Mary Cheong in Singapore typed drafts of the manuscript. Professor Kingston Braybrooke read an early draft of the manuscript and put me right on many matters. I am grateful to them all. I include the mandatory statement that no one but I am responsible for any errors made in this work.

I thank the British Institute of International and Comparative Law and the Editor of the International and Comparative Law Quarterly for permission to use material I published in the ICLQ. I thank the Editor of the Journal of World Trade Law for permission to use articles I published in the JWTL in writing this book.

Thanga, Ahila and Ramanan gave up time that I should have given them so that this book could be written.
