This book is a sequel to Early Prints of Ceylon which was published in 1985. Even though much of the pictorial material for the present work had been documented earlier, a greater part of the past three years has been consumed in preparing Illustrations and Views of Dutch Ceylon for the printer.

During this period, we have had much assistance and encouragement from friends and institutions in Holland, England and Sri Lanka. To Evert Jongens of the Netherlands-Sri Lanka Foundation who has enthusiastically supported and encouraged the project from the very beginning, and to Martine Wolff of CNO who has coordinated the work throughout, we say a special 'thank you'.

Every institution has given us unstinting assistance; moreover, their photographic departments have provided us with marvellous colour transparencies and black and white photographs for reproduction. Much of the pictorial material comes from the Netherlands - especially the Rijksmuseum and Rijksprentenkabinet, the Algemeen Rijksarchief, and the Royal Institute of Linguistics and Anthropology; also, the libraries of the Universities of Amsterdam and Leiden, and the Maritime Museums of Amsterdam and Rotterdam; Teylers and Zeeuws Museums; Atlas van Stolk and the Rotterdam Ethnographic Museum. In the U.K., the British Museum (Natural History) and in Sri Lanka - the National Archives.

Although the material used from these institutions is acknowledged in the captions relating to each illustration and in the list of illustrations, we extend our grateful thanks for their cooperation, and additional thanks to their most helpful staff. We are also most grateful to Ranjit Wijewardena for providing the Battle of Batacola, Brendon Gooneratne - Elephant Kraal; Corinna Obeyesekera - Knox photographs and portrait and Nihal Fernando for photographing the Dutch Governor's portraits in President's House.

There are several others to whom we are very indebted and to them too, we extend our appreciation and thanks. Ronald Lewcock despite his busy schedule, has enriched this book with a contribution on Dutch architecture. W A Nelson has allowed us liberal use of maps, diagrams and parts of texts from his excellent book Dutch Forts of Sri Lanka. This has proved invaluable, as many of our colour illustrations are of these forts. In addition he has given us his unpublished manuscript with the up-to-date situation of these forts; Robert van Diessen too, toured the north and east of Sri Lanka immediately prior to the troubles in these regions and has given us information freely about the state of the remaining forts and churches; also his and Albert van den Belt's 'discovery' of six watercolours in the Rijksmuseum has certainly helped to embellish our book. They have also been most generous in allowing us use of translations of their analyses of these drawings, which appeared in the Rijksmuseum Bulletin of 1987.

For the purpose of updating and supplementing the texts and notes we have had to rely on friends in Sri Lanka for information. Vesak Nanayakkara has travelled many kilometres, written to numerous officials and delved deeply into his tomes and his memory in his quest to provide us with answers to several difficult questions - some of which, despite his diligence, remain elusive and unanswered. Sonia Fernando, after sifting through mounds of journals and manuscripts, has provided reams of microfilm and photocopies. To both of them we extend our gracious thanks. So too, to Chris Uragoda (Leper Hospital), Caroline Godfried (Swedish translations), Lodewijk Wagenaar (photograph of Falck oilpainting), and Haris de Silva (Director, National Archives).

Others who have been close to the book are - Christine de Silva who has typed much of the manuscript in addition to proof reading it; Lynette Hettiarachi who has read, corrected and edited the manuscript throughout, invariably at very short notice; Clare Davies-Jones who has done most of the final editing; Kirti Pandya and Manjula Bulsara of KSP Graphics for the phototypesetting and some art work. Tien Wah Press has, once again, done us proud with their colour reproductions and printing. To them all, we are indeed deeply grateful.
