

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am deeply indebted to my teacher Prof. Dr H. D. Sankalia, Director of Deccan College, Poona, for his erudite supervision at every stage of the work.

I gratefully acknowledge the scholarly guidance as well as the numerous personal favours extended to me so affectionately by Dr S. B. Deo, now Professor and Head of the Department of Ancient Indian Culture and Archaeology, Nagpur University. Dr F. R. Allchin of Cambridge University obliged me by sending a copy of the late Dr C. Mahadevan's unpublished paper; I have also greatly benefited from the discussions I had with him about the material from the Kodekal site, during his visit to Deccan College in 1967. Dr G. G. Mujumdar, now Reader in Archaeological Chemistry, Deccan College, visited the Kodekal site while the excavation was in progress and helped me in interpreting the stratigraphy. My friend Mr (now Dr) A. Sundara, now Lecturer in Dharwar University, not only permitted me to make use of his collections of pottery and stone artifacts from some of the sites in the Doab, but rendered me valuable assistance by joining me in the Kodekal excavation. I am indebted to the University Grants Commission, New Delhi, for the award of a Research Fellowship to enable me to carry out this research work. In the course of my field work I received wonderful cooperation and hospitality from village heads and government officials, too numerous to mention one by one.

Finally, I wish to place on record my deep sense of gratitude to Prof. Dr J. E. van Lohuizen-de Leeuw, Director of the Institute of South Asian Archaeology, University of Amsterdam, for showing keen interest in my dissertation and, more important for including it in the monograph series of her reputed Institute.
