

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This volume is, in essence, my doctoral dissertation, "The Samaritan Dositheans", Columbia University, 1973. I wish to express my gratitude to those who advised me in that project. My most profound thanks go to Professor Morton Smith, of the Department of History at Columbia, who proposed the topic to me, guided my research, criticized several drafts of the thesis, and, after it was accepted for the degree, made many valuable suggestions about preparing the text for publication. The members of my Ph.D. committee made many useful comments which led to new discoveries and to important revisions. They were : Professor Gerson D. Cohen, Chancellor, Jewish Theological Seminary of America; Professor Cyril Richardson, Dean of Graduate Studies, Union Theological Seminary; Professor Nina Garsoian, Department of History, Columbia University; and Professor Theodore Gaster, Department of Religion, Barnard College and Columbia University. Any errors contained in this book, however, are completely my own, and I bear full responsibility for its central argument and all factual mistakes that may be found.

I am grateful to Mr. Lee Scanlon of New York City for his initial translation of the relevant text of Abu'l Fath, but my greatest appreciation is for Professor Leon Nemoy of Dropsie University, who looked over this highly colloquial Arabic text and offered corrections and comments regarding the translation. Again, I am fully responsible for the way I have used their material in this work, and the conclusions drawn from it are mine.

I also wish to thank Professor Jacob Neusner of Brown University, the general editor of the series, "Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity", and the staff at E. J. Brill in Leiden, F. Th. Dijkema, Oriental Editor, F. C. Wieder, Jr., Director, and J. D. Verschoor, General Secretary for their labors on behalf of this volume, for their suggestions, and for their putting up with my delays and other problems.

A different kind but equally important and sincere gratitude goes to those whose financial contributions made it possible to include the original Greek, Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic texts in this publication. The type-setting of these languages is expensive, but I felt that the presence of these materials, i.e., all the sources on Dositheus and the Dositheans, would make the book more valuable for those interested in the subject. I therefore thank Professor Neusner and Dr. Stefanie Isser, my mother, for their generous subsidies.

Finally I extend my special love and appreciation to my wife, Charlotte, and my daughters, Rebecca and Deborah, for their encouragement and understanding during the many years of my graduate studies and preparation of my dissertation and its revisions.

I hope that this volume will make a contribution to the field of Jewish-Samaritan sectarianism and eschatological motifs, and will help to emphasize the importance of Samaritan studies for the understanding of Judaism and Christianity in late antiquity.

Some of the material in Part Two of this volume has previously appeared in my article, "Dositheus, Jesus, and a Moses Aretalogy", in Christianity, Judaism and other Greco-Roman Cults. Studies for Morton Smith at Sixty, ed. J. Neusner, Part Four, Leiden, Brill, 1975, pp. 167-189.

Albany, New York

STANLEY J. ISSER