

PREFACE

The following monograph is based on my doctoral dissertation accepted by the Faculty of Vanderbilt Graduate School in 1961. The dissertation has been condensed and revised so that the present monograph bears only moderate resemblance to the original work.

I wish to express my gratitude to Professor Leander Keck, my dissertation adviser, for his exegetical skill, dedication to scholarship, concern for quality, and warm friendship. My thanks are also due to Rabbi Lou Silberman who assisted me in gaining knowledge of rabbinic literature and appreciation for the rabbinic mentality. Professor Robert A. Kraft of the University of Pennsylvania has made some penetrating criticisms and useful suggestions for which I am greatly indebted. The shortcomings of this work are obviously my own.

I am also indebted to Cambridge University Press for permission to use material from my articles which appeared in New Testament Studies, Volume X (1963-64), pp. 121-7 and Volume XIII (1966-67), pp. 270-81. Interpretation has also kindly granted permission to appropriate material from my article in Volume VII (1963), pp. 176-82.

Preparation of the manuscript for publication was assisted through a grant-in-aid allocated by the Faculty Committee on Research and Creative Activity of Southwestern At Memphis, to which I am most grateful. Among those who have made publication possible I especially wish to express my gratitude to Miss Annie May Alston for her keen sense of order and merciless demand for perspicuity. Mrs. Sue Henderson has provided excellent secretarial assistance in the preparation of the manuscript, preparing the indexes, and correcting the galley proof.

To my wife, I wish to express my deep appreciation for her understanding and encouragement; to her this work is affectionately dedicated.
