

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The re-publication of the Blue Book has taken far more time than we ever anticipated, and it would have taken even more time if a number of people had not provided the selfless help and assistance which they did.

Werner Hillebrecht, of the National Archives of Namibia, provided us with ongoing general assistance ranging from the scanning of photographs through to discovering the original glass plate negatives of the photographs that graced the Blue Book. Casper Erichsen, as a fellow historian and friend, supported us in all manner of means, from acting as chaffeur through to being prepared to engage with the past. Mandhavela Khasera provided us with invaluable assistance with initial proof-reading of the scanned text, whilst Lovisa Ndaoya and Lovisa Nampala scanned the text.

On a personal level we would like to thank a few people for providing emotional support and hope for the future, in contrast to the depressing and damaging material which we were dealing with. We would like to explicitly express thanks to Gertie and Kasai, and to our children Meta, Shelley, and Sieme in whom we see our shared futures.

We have noted in the introduction that we see this re-publication as a memorial to those Namibians who died and suffered as a result of the Namibian War. At times our work on this re-publication has been brought to a temporary halt on account of the sheer immensity of what was being said. Yet, these very same intensely unsettling words ensured that we did not break off from our work. To have done so would have been to insult the past. It is thus with deep respect for those who have come before us and whose suffering is described in such graphic detail in this book that we give thanks.

We would also like to thank the Publications Committee of the African Studies Centre for generously providing a guaranteed subsidy which allowed for the co-publication at a reasonable price of this re-publication in the Republic of Namibia.

Time and again the students that we have taught, in Germany, Namibia, and the Netherlands, have urged us to carry on, to bring to the fore the past. A past which had become obscured and all but lost. Thus, in conclusion we would wish to dedicate this re-publication to the young historians of Namibia. They hold within their hands the key to a better future.
