

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book was begun when much about its subject matter, the legal character of contemporary economic reform and restructuring, was still an open question. During this time, I benefited enormously from conversations and workshops with a remarkably vibrant and provocative community of scholars at the Graduate Program at Harvard Law School; this book is marked in countless ways by their presence. Among those from whom and with whom I learned much are Tony Anghie, Bojan Bugaric, James Gatti, Aeyal Gross, Mala Htun, Outi Korhonen, Vasuki Nesiah, Celestine Nyamu, Balakrishnan Rajagopal and Robert Wai. I am indebted to David Kennedy for his vision of international scholarship, and for an environment which allowed so much collective learning and encouraged so much innovative work. Special thanks also to Seyla Benhabib for her involvement at the earliest stages. My greatest intellectual debt, however, remains to Duncan Kennedy who oversaw the endeavor from its most embryonic stage with characteristic acuity and engagement. His contribution in terms of time, support and knowledge is simply incalculable.

Parts of this work were presented at workshops and conferences at the University of Cape Town, the University of Connecticut, the European Law Research Center at Harvard Law School, the Human Rights Program at Harvard Law School, the Institute des Haute Etude in Geneva, and the University of Michigan. I am grateful to Jean Marc Coicaud, Joanne Conaghan, Michael Fischl, Veijo Heiskanen, Robert Howse, David Kennedy, Karl Klare, Joel Paul, Balakrishnan Rajagopal and Henry Steiner for their kindness and support in providing the opportunity to do so, and to the participants at these events for their responses.

For comments at various points on earlier drafts and sections of the manuscript, I would like to especially thank Gregory Alexander, Bill Bratton, Karen Engle, Gunter Frankenberg, Jan Klabbers, Outi Korhonen, Marti Koskenniemi, Robert Wai and Bruce Ziff. Although they will surely find much still to amend, it is immensely better for the time and care which they took.

A number of students at the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto provided valuable research assistance in the preparation of the manuscript: for this I thank Lea Waldorf, Joe Cheng, and Erin Stoik. I also relied t at crucial moments on my assistant at the Faculty of Law, Allyn Chudy, and on Shikha Sharma at the Bora Laskin Law Library.

I am very grateful for the generous financial support received at various points during this project from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada, and the Connaught Research Fund at the University of Toronto.

Finally, to Robert Wai, for all the things that made it possible.

Kerry Rittich