

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

We are very grateful to many people and institutions for the valuable help we have received, without which the completion of this book would have been more difficult than it has already been. Of those, we wish to highlight the following in particular.

We have received valuable help from the Institute of Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies, Durham University, United Kingdom during the various stages of completing this work. To the Institute and the University we are very grateful.

At Prince of Songkla University, Thailand, we are grateful to the President of the university, Associate Professor Dr Boonsom Siribumrungsukha. We are particularly thankful for his support and encouragement in his continuous effort to make the university a national and international centre of excellence in research and teaching. To Dean of Faculty of Management Sciences, Director of College of Islamic Studies and Head of Department of Islamic Studies at the same college, we owe special thanks for their enthusiasm and encouragement and for providing the logistical support and study leave needed for the completion of this work.

The assistance from library staff proved invaluable. To the library staff at the University of Paisley, Scotland, the former place of work of one of the authors, Durham University and the Prince of Songkla University, at both Pattani and Hat Yai campuses, Thailand, we extend a big thank you.

Our list of acknowledgement would not be complete without giving special thanks to Arthur Probsthain, Oriental bookseller and publisher, London, for their valuable help and assistance in coping with our requests and in advising us on source material.
