

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Anyone writing a work as complex as this one depends upon the aid of many persons. Chief among them are the readers of the dissertation at Harvard University from which this work grew: Professors Peter Machinist, Jo Ann Hackett, and Sarah Coakley. Their generous advice, meticulous weighing of arguments, and unfailing enthusiasm for the project helped me keep going when entropy might well have taken its toll. In addition, others have listened patiently to my ideas, offering suggestions, corrections, and bibliographical leads. During student days, these included: Pamela Barmash, Catherine Beckerleg, Marianne Palmer Bonz, Shaun Casey, Cindy Chapman, Anne Custer, Mark Kurtz, Gregory Mobley, Irene Monroe, and Avi Winitzer. My colleagues at Abilene Christian University, especially Frederick Aquino, Timothy Sensing, James Thompson, and John T. Willis have been a constant source of encouragement, correction, and stimulation. My graduate assistants Philip Stambaugh, Harry Conner, and especially Kelly Shearon have pointed out places where the argument could be clearer; Ms. Shearon's extraordinary care for the manuscript and the arguments it contains deserve especial recognition. Audiences at regional and national SBL meetings and at the Southwest Biblical Studies Seminar led by Roy Melugin of Brite Divinity School have also helped me sift these ideas. My readers might have been better served if I had taken more of the advice of all these fine scholars and friends. Much of what is valuable here certainly owes its existence to these collaborators; much of what is objectionable stands in spite of them.

Most of all I thank my family, my wife and intellectual and emotional soul mate Samjung Kang-Hamilton and the children who grace our lives, Nathan and Hannah. They have lived with the body of the king for a long time, and have done so with the charmingly bemused sympathy everyone should receive from a family. To them this work is dedicated.
