I should like to record my thanks to the many people and institutions who supported me during my work on this book: first and foremost to Hinrich Siefken and Colin Riordan who both offered invaluable advice and support before, during and after my sabbatical and were, and have remained, so willing to act as referees for me; to the Arts and Humanities Research Board (as was) for awarding me a Research Leave grant that turned one semester of study leave into a two-semester sabbatical; to the British Academy who awarded me a Small Grant to spend a month's research in Germany during my sabbatical; to staff at the Deutsches Literaturarchiv in Marbach for their support during my stay there; to the University of Wales Bangor for allowing me study leave, and especially to Tony Brown who encouraged me to apply for the AHRB grant in the first place; to my former colleagues in the Modern Languages department in Bangor for indulging me for so long and then letting me go with so many kind words; and to the many cohorts of Bangor students who seemingly never tired of hearing about this project, and especially to those who gave me such a moving send-off in December 2004. I should also like to thank two very important people for their continued, invaluable encouragement: Graeme Harper, for remaining such an inspiration and for pushing me into academic areas I might otherwise have avoided, and finally my wife Kate, who was working flat out on her PhD during my work on this project and yet remained so supportive throughout. This book is dedicated to her and my family.

This project would not have been possible without the support of these people. If any errors remain, however, then these are solely my responsibility.
