Throughout the years the years spent on this project, I was buoyed, as always, by the love of my wife Barbara, our son John, and our daughter Rachel, her husband Don, their son Pat. My writing style has been considerably improved by the timely arrival of Pat, whose recent Lego constructions have taught me a thing or two about putting things together and taking them apart. My colleague Roberta Maguire sacrificed hours that she did not have to spare from her own work to be the only reader of this project-in-gestation. My colleague Charles Caramello, Chair of the Department of English, University of Maryland, College Park, generously contributed to its prenatal care. My colleague Shawn Saremi was essential to its delivery.
