The realization of this manuscript would not have been possible without the support of my family, friends and various colleagues. A complete list would be longer than the manuscript itself, but I would be remiss without acknowledging a few people:

Dr. Peter Schulman, who encouraged me to revise my dissertation for publication, even before it had been defended. I have been grateful for his guidance and editorial advice, and I look forward to working with him on future projects.

Alain Regnault at the Bibliothèque des Littératures Policières (BiLiPo) in Paris, who pointed me in the right direction when my research was leading me astray.

The Fulbright Commission, which facilitated my research in Paris by sending me to France as an assistante d'anglais in the région parisienne (1997-98), and the University of Mississippi Office of Research and Sponsored Programs, which provided funding for conducting additional research at the BiLiPo in 2004.

Dr. Deborah Hamilton, who led me to discover Léo Malet after reading his obituary online.

Drs. Lauren Doyle-McCombs and Claudia Nadine, who read many early versions of the manuscript, and my professors at the University of Alabama.

Christa Stevens, the editorial board at Faux Titre, and others at Rodopi, for their assistance during the preparation of the manuscript for publication.

My colleagues at the University of Mississippi Libraries, whose patience and indulgence during the completion of this project have been appreciated.

My mother, for always listening, and for giving the advice I need to hear.
