

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The editors would like to thank the contributors for their prompt and efficient cooperation, without which this book would not have been possible. They would, in particular, like to thank the authors of the country reports contained in the Annex to this book.

The editors are also greatly indebted to several members of EIPA's supporting staff, namely Pat Arpino, Veerle Deckmyn, Denise Grew, Christopher Dart and Jeannette Zuidema who made a very efficient editorial and production team.

As I am sure all political science academics, experts and officials on Public Budgeting are already aware, Aaron Wildavsky died in California on 4 September this year. This took place during the last phase of publishing this book. By means of this brief note, I, as well as my colleagues at the European Institute of Public Administration, would like to express our gratitude and admiration for the knowledge and opinions which he transmitted to us at the time of his stay at our Institute. It was a great opportunity for me to work with him towards the end of 1992 and, at the same time, co-edit this publication. Talking and listening to him was even more fascinating than reading his highly impressive written works. We are all in debt to him not only for his eminent works in the field of budgeting and political science but also, and more directly, for his far-reaching contribution to EIPA's programme development.
