

Call for proposals

New Perspectives on the Cold War

Series Editors:

Jussi Hanhimäki and Marco Wyss

This book series offers new perspectives on the East-West conflict by building on recent and current historiographical developments in Cold War history. It moves beyond traditional narratives by investigating the impact of both medium and lesser powers on the evolution of the Cold War. In addition to state actors, books focus on international organisations and non-state actors, such as national liberation movements, non-governmental organisations, and civil society groups.

The scope of the series is global, with a particular interest in hitherto neglected (sub-) regions, notably the Global South. Methodologically, submissions should be based on multi-archival historical research, and may draw on other related disciplines, such as (but not limited to) anthropology, area studies, international relations, and security studies. While the series privileges research monographs, it also welcomes proposals for edited volumes.

We look forward to receiving proposals for monographs and edited volumes between 80,000 – 150,000 in length, including footnotes and bibliography. Any exception to this will be discussed on a case by case basis. Proposals should include your name and affiliation, a tentative title, a brief description of the contents, and its aim and scope. For more information, please check the Author Guide.

Authors are cordially invited to submit proposals and/or full manuscripts to the publisher at Brill, Dr Kate Hammond (kate.hammond@degruyterbrill.com).

Editorial board:

Nigel Ashton, The London School of Economics and Political Science; Mark P. Bradley, The University of Chicago; Anne Deighton, University of Oxford; Mario del Pero, Centre d'histoire de Sciences Po (CHSP) (Paris); Bernd Greiner, Berlin Center for Cold War Studies; Tanya Harmer, London School of Economics and Political Science; Hope M. Harrison, The George Washington University; Nicholas Khoo, University of Otago; Wolfgang Mueller, University of Vienna; Andrew Preston, University of Virginia; Sergey Radchenko, Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS); Anna-Mart Van Wyk, University of Johannesburg; Taomo Zhou, University of Singapore