Two Decades of Madagascar

Politics, Economy and Society 2004-2024

Richard Marcus, California State University, Long Beach, USA

Drawing on themes from Africa Yearbook chapters on Madagascar, this book charts the country's journey through some of its most turbulent years. Democracy, marked by uneven progress, has weathered repeated elections, an unconstitutional government overthrow, rising social movements, and shifting domestic and international alliances. During this time, Madagascar witnessed extraordinary per capita international donor investment, signaling both global interest and urgent need. Yet the country remains a paradox: a place where solid institutions and pockets of economic growth persist alongside some of the world's deepest poverty and most fragile democratic practices. It is a story of resilience, contradiction, and transformation.

READERSHIP: Academic Libraries, Institutes, Africa Specialists, Madagascar Specialists, Democracy Scholars, Madagascar Policy Practitioners.

Der Judaskuss der Malerei

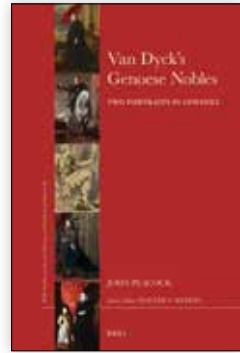

Subversive Bildstrategien im Werk Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggios

Jürgen Müller,
Dresden University

Caravaggio's art is subjected to a political interpretation that draws on Erasmus's writings, which were skeptical of imagery. Contrary to Catholic doctrine on images, the paintings express the sacred best through the profane. The divine is hidden beneath a cloak of the vulgar.

Art and Material Culture in Medieval and Renaissance Europe, 30

This is first full account of the most portrayed figural subject in Anglo-Saxon sculpture: the Crucifixion. It brings together in a single volume a record of every known stone depiction related to the Crucifixion from the pre-Conquest kingdoms, from South West Scotland to the tip of Cornwall, each illustrated along with contemporary manuscript images and ivory carvings. It is an analytical study based on fieldwork over several decades with the objective of providing a central resource for scholars who may not have direct access to the dispersed and fragmentary material.

READERSHIP: Art historians, archaeologists, Anglo-Saxon specialists, history of religion specialists, art sculpture, Christianity, early church in England, students, academic libraries.

The Cape Route and the Silk Roads

Edited by Carmen Amado Mendes
and João Paulo Oliveira e Costa

Did you know that the fan, which was used in Japan by men, became transformed into a female European accessory when it was adopted by the Portuguese Queen in Lisbon? The Cape Route was opened in 1499 to bring spices to Europe, but the Portuguese vessels also brought other products from the lands of Asia, while European technology and science, Christianity and American silver reached every corner of Asia. The Cape Route enabled products and ideas to circulate within the Silk Roads system, involving Eurasia from West to East, and transformed Lisbon into the hub that spread new patterns of consumption and new fashions in Europe. It also introduced new forms of warfare, new scientific knowledge and a new religion throughout Asia.

READERSHIP: Historians of China and Asia as well as early modern Europe, trade and navigation, (underwater) archaeology and ship-building, maritime history, missionary history and socio-economic history.

Violence and the Book of the Psalms

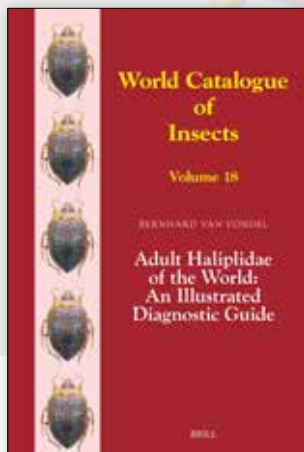

Multiple Methodological Perspectives

Lodewyk Sutton, University of the Free State, South Africa, and Gideon R. Kotzé, North-West University, South Africa

The many and varied manifestations of violence that permeate the Book of Psalms can be off-putting for modern audiences. Although the violence in the poems might leave readers cold, it remains a hot topic that requires careful consideration. The contributions of this volume deal with the theme of violence and the Psalms from different methodological perspectives. They focus on various aspects and manifestations of the complex phenomenon of violence (physical, verbal, emotional, psychological, structural, etc.), their expressions in single or groups of psalms and the Psalter as a whole and employ a variety of approaches to interpret the biblical texts.

READERSHIP: This book would be of interest to Biblical scholars and students (especially those who study the Psalms), as well as researchers in the fields of theology and ethics who are interested in the topic of the Bible and violence.

Toward a New Aesthetics
Institutional Criticism in Art Education from 1900 to Today
Sandra Neugärtner

Has art education lost its critical edge? Is art becoming just another form of intellectual labor? Toward a New Aesthetics argues that the increasing “scientification” of art is directly linked to a decline in institutional self-critique. This study offers the first comprehensive examination of institutional critique within art schools. Through contributions from leading art historians, critics, educators, and artists, readers will trace a century of critical engagement, from radical challenge and transformative beginnings to today’s institutional affirmation. Exploring international case studies, the book reveals how the rise of artistic research has profoundly impacted art’s critical potential within the global knowledge economy.

READERSHIP: This book is essential for postgraduate and advanced undergraduate students, scholars of art history and theory, artists, art educators, and anyone interested in art education, knowledge production, and the evolving relationship between art and institutional structures within the neoliberal knowledge economy.

Anselm and Scripture

The Bible in the Thought of Anselm of Canterbury

Rachel Cresswell,

University of Oxford

Anselm and Scripture explores the role of scriptural 'signa' (clusters) of biblical words and images) in Anselm's theology. It offers a new framework for analysing scripture's presence in Anselm's writings, uncovering scripture's centrality in his program of 'faith seeking understanding'.

READERSHIP: This volume will be especially relevant to academic readers and specialists in medieval history, historical theology, monasticism, and liturgy, as well as students interested in medieval biblical reception.

The Twelve Tribes of Israel

Jewish-Christian Interpretations between Ruptures and Continuities (1st–5th centuries)

Michele Cutino, Université de Strasbourg, and Calogero Cerami, Facoltà Teologica di Sicilia “San Giovanni Evangelista”

The theme of the twelve tribes of Israel is one of the key points for observing the continuity and discontinuity between Judaism and Christianity, which derives from it. It is therefore a very sensitive topic of ‘the parting of the ways’, which surprisingly has not aroused much interest among critics. This volume aims to fill this gap by first placing the twelve tribes of Israel in their historical context within Jewish culture, then moving on to the various, often contradictory, interpretations that Christians have given to this concept since the early centuries, before finally using this model to refer to the Church as the new Israel.

READERSHIP: The volume is aimed at a wide audience of scholars interested in the history of Judaism and Christianity, as well as ancient Christian literature in its historical development.

Establishing Spatiotemporal Linguistics

Toward an Interdisciplinary Approach to the History of Language and of Human Movement

Edited by KIKUSAWA Ritsuko,
OKAMOTO Susumu
and SUZUKI Hiroyuki

This book launches spatiotemporal linguistics by uniting geohistorical linguistics with computational methods such as GIS and statistics. Through field data from Fijian languages, it demonstrates how integrated approaches can become possible and potentially reveal genetic, contact-induced, and sporadic language change.

READERSHIP: This volume targets linguists, anthropologists, geographers, historians, and data scientists, as well as graduate students and researchers interested in language change at the intersection of fieldwork, spatial analysis, and computation.

Calligraphies et manuscrits dans l'Inde des sultanats

Éloïse Brac de la Perrière, Sorbonne Université
avec la collaboration de
Monique Burési et de
Nuria García-Masip

Objets d'une tradition calligraphique singulière, les manuscrits en écriture bihari révèlent une esthétique et une fonction étroitement liées. À travers leurs formes, leurs usages et leurs significations ésotériques, ils éclairent une dimension méconnue de la culture matérielle et spirituelle de l'Inde pré-moghole.

READERSHIP: Proposant un regard inédit sur les traditions calligraphiques et artistiques de l'Inde pré-moghole, cet ouvrage s'adresse aux bibliothèques universitaires, aux chercheurs ainsi qu'aux étudiants en histoire de l'art islamique.

Women of the Empire

Life and Labor in the Achaemenid Persepolis Archives

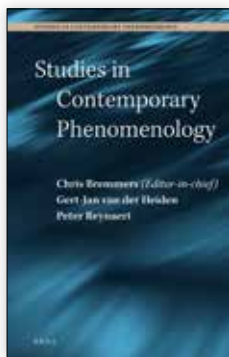

Yazdan Safaee, Universität Innsbruck

This book offers a comprehensive examination of the status and roles of women within the socio-economic framework of the Achaemenid Empire. Drawing primarily on the Persepolis Fortification and Treasury Archives, it foregrounds the documentary evidence as a lens through which the lives, labor, and agency of women—both within royal institutions and beyond—can be critically assessed. Women of the Empire explores a range of thematic issues across its chapters, highlighting the diverse contexts in which women appear in administrative records and reconstructing their participation in the imperial economy.

READERSHIP: This book will be of interest to scholars and students in Ancient Near Eastern studies, Achaemenid history, gender studies, and economic history. It will also appeal to researchers in archival studies, Iranian studies, and comparative imperial systems. By foregrounding women's roles in the Persepolis archives, it offers valuable insights for those exploring the intersection of gender, power, and administration in ancient empires.

Orientophilia and the Birth of Asian Hermeneutics
Tirtha Prasad Mukhopadhyay,
 University of Guanajuato

This book explores how some European Enlightenment philosophers initiated a hermeneutics of Indic and Asiatic iconography from an erroneous homegrown spiritualism. This paradoxically invited a neonarrative response from their Asian counterparts, who evolved a more authentic version of Asia's idol and iconic expressions.

READERSHIP: This book is an indispensable reading for scholars and students of Indian and Asiatic arts collections in Europe and America.

Uncertainty

From Probability to Fiction and Religion

Yair Neuman, Ben-Gurion University of the Negev, Israel

In a scientifically oriented world, our understanding of uncertainty is almost exclusively mediated by probabilistic ideas, whether naïvely understood or theoretically grounded. However, there is one context where the scientific idea of probability is notable by its absence: our experience of uncertainty as individuals from a first-person perspective, from within. Here, fiction as “the science of the particular” may help by exposing the phenomenology of uncertainty. In this book, Prof. Neuman studies experiences of uncertainty as reflected and expressed in fiction. Although a common saying is that God does not play dice (with the universe), it will be shown that God's presence and absence both repeatedly accompany the experience of uncertainty. This book, critical and interdisciplinary, is imbued with irony and humor, and contains profound reflections that will give the reader a fresh perspective on the feelings we experience when facing the abyss of ignorance.

READERSHIP: Academics and graduate students in science, literature or religion.
